It attempts to develop a comprehensive theory of the feature that all and only conscious mental events have. According to the theory, conscious mental events differ from unconscious ones in that, whatever else they may represent, they always also represent themselves, and do so in a very specific way. Kriegel's theory is called the "self-representational" theory of phenomenal consciousness. Subjective character is that feature of a conscious state by virtue of which there is something it is like for the subject. But being "for the subject", according to Kriegel, means being something of which the subject is aware. book Subjective Consciousness: A Self-Representational Theory, Uriah Kriegel approaches this venerable idea with the sophisticated tool-kit.
