

Strategic Planning And Management In Transit Agencies: A Synthesis Of Transit Practice

APPENDIX D

Selective Survey Questionnaire

Selective Survey of Agencies

The Institute for Transportation Research and Education, North Carolina State University, was selected to conduct a Synthesis project under the federal Transit Cooperative Research Program (TCRP). The purpose of the project is to look at the use of strategic planning and management in the transit industry. We will examine the extent of the use of strategic planning, the various methodologies that have been used, and how effective it has been.

For the purposes of this survey, strategic planning is defined as a process used to define an organization's vision, mission, challenges, and opportunities; establish long- and short-range goals; guide business processes; and measure performance. It helps an organization anticipate the future rather than just reacting to it. It helps to integrate the organization's various activities and programs and to better align the organization with stakeholders. For example, when strategic planning is linked with stakeholder interests, budgeting, service deployment, and performance measurement, it can be a very powerful method for effective and efficient strategic management of an organization.

Note: this questionnaire can be filled out electronically and returned, or it can be faxed or mailed to the address below. There is a continuation sheet at the end of this questionnaire that can be used if necessary for your answers to the questions.

Your name:
Title:
Name of agency:
Phone:
E-mail:

Does your transit agency currently perform a strategic planning/management process (or a similar process by another name) or has it done so in the past? (This does not include the development of the federally-required Long-Range Transportation Plan/ITP.) YES NO

If you performed "strategic planning" in the past but no longer do so, please describe why the practice was stopped?

If you no longer perform strategic planning, you may stop here and return the questionnaire to:
